

Universidade Santiago de Compostela

City: Santiago de Compostela – Country: Spain

The University of Santiago de Compostela (USC) is a public institution dedicated to preserving, generating, transmitting and publishing knowledge in a socially responsible manner. Founded in 1495, the main campus is located in a city declared to be Cultural World Heritage Sites by UNESCO. The USC is a comprehensive university that not only provides a wide range of academic courses in all of the major fields of knowledge, but that also carries out significant research, giving it a notable position among Spanish and international Universities (ranking between the 200 best universities in the world in Modern Languages according to the QS World University by Subject).

The Crossways Programme is part of the Master in Studies in Literature and Culture, which places emphasis on theory, comparative literature, media and interarts studies, “post-literary” practices and emergent writings, as well as on the geo-cultural and historical aspects of European literature.
